release one for Windows 8, including a update for its new touch-oriented OS. "We are now posting a new Windows Update for Windows 8 for all supported languages with the installer/update. (This will be available here and on Windows Update, in the coming days)," said Andrew Shafer, a representative for Microsoft in a tweet, Saturday. While Microsoft did not release an official statement about the issue, Bloomberg reported Friday that the issue affects certain laptops from a company called Acer. Bloomberg said the company's laptops have small fans that produce noise if they are not working properly, and often do not cool down properly, as well. For more on the issue, check out: Microsoft issues "fix" for Windows 8.1 systems Acer claims fan noise problem with new Windows 8.1 laptops Windows 8.1 phones: Win 8.1 for Android, Win 8.1 for BlackBerry and webOS Shafer did not provide details about the issue when he tweeted about it. He did say Microsoft is aware of the problem and is working on a fix. "We are aware of some customers reporting issues updating the Windows 8.1 update service with their device (laptops & PCs), and are investigating. We will post an update here when we have more," said Shafer. On May 14, Microsoft announced the Windows 8.1 update that it said is "required for the stability of certain device drivers and the core system to work." Update requires Windows Update for additional devices "If you're updating from Windows 8 or Windows 8.1 you need Windows Update for additional devices for a clean install of this update," said Shafer at the time. Windows Update for additional devices is "required for a clean
