Sketchup Sketchup is a digital model based toolkit that is aimed at building 3D models. The application is freeware and is available for Mac OS X, Microsoft Windows and Unix/Linux systems. Sketchup's main application includes modelling features such as blocks, geometry manipulation and tools for modeling and texturing. In 2009, Autodesk acquired Sketchup, and in 2010 Sketchup acquired Toon Boom, the creator of the animation software Synfig. SketchUp is also used in 3D animation. In 2011, animator/cartoonist John Kricfalusi created a comic titled "Skweek", which is produced in SketchUp and Anim8or. In 2014, Thomas Frank from the YouTube channel 'The Frank & McSkeetoShow' created the Flintstones virtual model for his SketchUp user 'Brock' in which he not only produced a model of the iconic 1960's cartoon characters, but then animated the models onto the models themselves. AutoCAD Architecture is one of many applications which use SketchUp. Autodesk's Urban Design online services use SketchUp to complete the virtual design of urban components that are then converted to AutoCAD drawing and modelling formats. SketchUp is also used for creating multiplayer games, as an art tool, as a computer animation tool for various companies, as a marketing tool, and as an illustration/logo software.
