This tech will be used to create faces, animations and movements for all the game's characters. The technology will also be utilized to give players – both professionals and amateurs – a more authentic, lifelike way of playing the game on the pitch, allowing players to be quicker to make decisions, be more fluid and adapt more quickly to real-life situations. What does this mean? FIFA players will feel more like they're playing the game inside the game. When you approach a goalkeeper, if you press up, you'll see an animated motion-capture that gives you the impression you are "punching" the ball off the ground with your arm. The technology also brings added gamepad features, such as a feature where the game camera can be played like a television screen and when set to slow-motion it will shoot at a hyper-realistic, slow-motion speed, allowing you to zoom in as close as you want. Also, using "Dead Zone," you can deactivate animations, such as the way a player runs towards a ball, allowing you to see what is going to happen before it happens and thus make more plays on the ball. The True Player Motion Engine will also give players an enhanced running animation, where players won't be as stiff like they were in FIFA 17. This technology will also give players a more natural and natural way of reacting to passes and give a better shot at picking passes. The new engine also allows players to be more realistic in their movement, meaning they will slip, lose the ball and react faster, giving them a more authentic, lifelike feel. Some stats from the FIFA Ultimate Team Team of the Year 2018 Edition, released August 12th, include: The biggest receiving trio ever with two of the three players being 23 years old or younger, Luis Suarez and Gonzalo Higuain. This is not only a historic moment for the FUT player but for the entire football community. Thirteen clubs received trophies this year, with Manchester City being the only team to win three of them this year and they did it in a row. Xavi is the highest rated player in FIFA 18 and also FIFA 19. Only 8 teams won a title in the last four years, with the exception of Germany and Spain. Crist
